CONTENT NOTE

The World Homes Collection tells the story of Willard Garvey's effort to build housing in developing nations. For Garvey, World Homes represented the practical application of his idea "Every Man a Home Owner, Every Man a Capitalist", which attempted to introduce the American concept of private property through home ownership.

The collection chronicles the Garvey effort in international housing finance and development from the conception of the idea by Willard Garvey in the late 1950s to the liquidation in the 1980s. During its life World Homes had subsidiary and affiliate companies operating on four continents in countries as diverse as Mexico, Taiwan, and Morocco.

The collection includes corporate correspondence, financial and legal records, project plans and designs, photographs, and films.

The World Homes Collection offers a variety of research opportunities for researchers of history, business, and international development, including the interplay between private U.S. corporations and U.S. foreign aid, and the issues involved in the management of multi-national corporations.

The processors of this collection have prepared an Introductory File to present the researcher a preliminary understanding of the nature and contents of the collection. None of the material in the introductory file is unique; the file consists of photocopied material that can be found in other parts of the collection.

POST-1972 SERIES

Even though World Homes ceased active operation in the international housing market after its dissolution in 1972, the idea of World Homes lived on. The continuation of this idea is the focus of this series.

This series includes files created after World Homes was officially dissolved, but still relate to the World Homes ideology, personnel, and practice. This relation is manifested in two ways: the first six files deal with projects that might have resulted in the reactivation of World Homes, and subsequent files deal with the brief reincarnation of World Homes in 1981, which never actually resulted in new home construction.

These files include personal and business correspondence, proposals for developments and other projects, plans, and information sources. These information sources included government publications, magazine and newspaper articles, conference reports, and annual reports and prospectuses of businesses. In general, these information sources are not included in the series. Instead, their existence is noted in the finding aid, allowing the researcher to track down the information if so desired. Sources are included in the series only if there are significant notations on the documents themselves, or the documents would be virtually impossible for a researcher to find, as in the case of conference reports that were only distributed to conference participants.

Please note that files that were post-1972 but related to continuing projects from World Homes are filed with that project. For example, a file on the closing of Hogares Mexicanos in 1975 is filed with the rest of the material on Hogares Mexicanos.

Also note that, during its resurrection in the 1980s, World Homes was a subsidiary of other Garvey business interests, most notably Garvey Enterprises, Inc (GEI). Initially, several boxes of material from these interests were included in the collection. However, since World Homes was a minor concern, much of the material had no relevance to the collection, and was returned to Garvey. All material that had direct relevance to World Homes, and merited archival retention, was kept in this series.
