A skillful hand, a discerning head and a loving heart-- all used together to make him an artist of endearing works. That great art is not wrought of poor materials was an early insight of his sensitive mind. All things well fashioned were in his orb of beauty. He revered the calligraph and cartograph, the incunable, and all books of honest design and worthy printing. Ever mirthful, he brought cheer to the lives of his fellows, and heightened the burdens of their daily rounds. And thus he hid his cares. From a library for the commonwealth, to a poker game for friends- whatever he planned he strove to shape it better than it was before. The example of this gentle man is our rich heritage. 'Without these the city is not built.' The editorial content of this map was completed the afternoon of Mr. Atchison's death, May 4, 1964, and finished by the hand of Bill Jackson, proprietor of the Four Ducks Press," 1967.
